WHAT MAKES A PLACE FEEL LIKE HOME?

Carly Bushman, an architecture student at the University of Oregon, is looking to interview refugees about their current houses in the Portland area compared to their homes in their country of origin. The goal of her research on refugee housing is to improve the living situations of resettled refugees. Her research could be referred to by designers, community organizations and government entities so she is reaching out to the refugee community in Portland to gain a better understanding of what can be done to improve their homes.

If you are interested in volunteering for this research, please contact Carly Bushman at cyb@uoregon.edu or the Portland Refugee Support Group (PRSG) and express your interest in volunteering. Volunteers must be refugees who have resettled in or around the Portland area between 18-70 years of age.
